

10 Angling

In weaving, angles are created by a repeated progression of small steps moving across your warp. Angled forms are particularly well suited to tapestry weaving because the place where the two wefts meet — the relay — moves over frequently, and the small slits at the edge of each step are unnoticeable.

